

Learning Style, Interests, Careers, and Colleges

Pray! Pray! Pray!

1. If you are interested in taking an assessment to find out your learning style, you can go here: <https://www.how-to-study.com/learning-style-assessment/>
2. You can take the O'Net Interest Profiler, to assess interests and how they relate to the world of work: <https://www.mynextmove.org/explore/ip> . You can also take the Holland Code Career Test to accomplish the same thing: <https://www.truity.com/test/holland-code-career-test> (you can research careers directly from your results on this site).
3. Once you've gotten your results from the Interest Profiler, you can go to O'Net Online to search for more information about specific careers, and what education is necessary for them: <https://www.onetonline.org/>

You can also go to the Occupational Outlook Handbook to look up careers and find out what education is needed, what the outlook for the job looks like, etc. There is a wealth of information here: <https://www.bls.gov/ooh/>

4. Once you have done your research on careers, you can go to the College Navigator to look up information on specific colleges, searching by major, location, type of college, etc.: <https://nces.ed.gov/collegenavigator/>. You can also go to College Board to look up information on specific colleges, searching by major, location, type of college, financial assistance, international student financial assistance, etc.: <https://collegesearch.collegeboard.org/home> .
5. Seek God for guidance regarding your future!
